PROGRAMS

JiYC™ provides a series of customizable modules focusing on a key set of distinct needs in the business marketplace today – team building, project management, strategic planning and motivating employees.

Team Building

Modules designed for delivery in a classroom setting for groups of 10 to 300 or more. Duration of the modules range from ½ day to 2 full days. Goals and objectives for each session are derived via discussion and consultation with the client. The intent of this consultation is to ascertain the status and cohesiveness of the existing team and the presence and level of understanding of goals and roles within the team. Depending upon the collective team status – team maturity – and the duration of program desired - various modules are combined to form a program agenda. These modules consist of team goal setting, team role determination, team operation rule determination, team status assessment, action plan creation, mapping of team objectives to overall business plans and the management of a team through a model of team assessment – the SHAPED model. The intent of the team building curriculum is to increase the probability of team success in meeting a set of objectives required by the sponsoring business. This is done via increasing team capabilities for the current as well as future projects, and training management in the creation of teams, team mission derivation and monitoring of teams.

Motivational Programs

These are sub-modules designed for delivery in a classroom setting as part of the team building and project management modules discussed above, or delivery in a auditorium setting in stand alone fashion. These are designed for delivery to groups from 5 to 300 people. Duration is from 30 minutes to ½ day. Goals and objectives for each session are focused on two primary elements; self-motivation of each employee by each employee and motivation of a team by a leader. Using a combination of humor, insightful stories and anecdotes, and viewing situations from varying viewpoints, motivation in individuals is generated. Presentation of techniques that include personality trait recognition and situational leadership enhance the team leaders abilities to recognize team member capabilities, preferred communication styles and confidence levels. Understanding these elements for each team member enhance the team leaders' ability to direct, motivate and drive team success. These motivational modules can be appropriately delivered to both the business and personal lives of the recipients.

The above module sets can be applied singly or together to form education programs for the client. These education programs can be delivered together in an “intensive” curriculum, or over time to improve the various elements of individual and team performance. The benefits of the module sets both interrelate and bolster each other. A motivated employee can work as a team leader or as part of a team, and can be successful at both. Motivated employees can spark and/or lead a team, with appropriate training. Effective teams are a must in producing successful projects, which require carefully formulated and applied management to ensure success.
